

College of Public Health and Health Professions Diversity Day Call For Poster Abstracts

The College of Public Health and Health Professions will hold its annual Diversity Day on Thursday, January 19, 2017. The theme this year is “Promoting Inclusion in a Complex World” and the Day will include a display of posters with the goal of promoting scholarly exchange of new ideas in the areas of: 1) health disparities, 2) global perspectives on health, 3) health and social justice, and 4) the impact of diversity on public health, health professions, and the sciences. Posters should highlight how diversity, cultural competency, inclusion, health literacy, health disparities, community and global outreach, social justice or related issues reflect on one or more of the college’s missions of education, research and service. Presented projects may be based on a research study, educational activity, or a service program. Submissions of widely varied formats (such as collages or other visual compilations) are encouraged; traditional research posters are not expected. Faculty and students from across the University of Florida campus are encouraged to submit abstracts.

Poster components should include:

- 1) Background related to your study, educational activity or service program.

Include why the issue is important and how it addresses diversity, cultural competency, inclusion, health literacy, health disparities, social justice, and/or community or global outreach.

- 2) Methods used for the research, educational, or service program.

Describe the methods used and how these address diversity, cultural competency, inclusion, health literacy, health disparities, social justice and/or community or global outreach.

Include the challenges and barriers encountered when implementing the activity.

- 3) Outcomes (if applicable) related to educational or service program activity. Research results are NOT to be included in the poster.

- 4) Section titled and describing: Implications Promoting Inclusion in a Complex World

The top three Diversity Day posters will receive special recognition.

Abstracts should be no longer than 250 words and submitted to Gus Mazorra (gmazorra@php.ufl.edu) by Friday, December 9, 2016, 5:00pm.
